Research Center Established in Springfield

The State Historical Society of Missouri announced a partnership with Missouri State University in May 2014 to expand its services currently offered in Springfield. The two organizations have since collaborated to establish a Research Center—Springfield housed in the Duane G. Meyer Library on the Springfield campus of Missouri State. At the facility, historians, researchers, and genealogists are able to access the Society's vast manuscript, book, and newspaper collections, no matter where the materials are housed.

The State Historical Society's statewide reach is growing, with centers now located in Cape Girardeau, Columbia, Kansas City, Rolla, Springfield, and St. Louis. Together with the Research Center-Rolla, the Springfield Center augments the resources available for historical research on the southwest region of the state. For details visit <http://shs.umsystem.edu/about/springfield>.

Mark Twain said it best: “News is history in its first and best form.” That’s why the Society archives newspapers from all 114 Missouri counties. Currently, 241 papers published in Missouri provide complimentary subscriptions.
