Historical Note:

In 1888, Dean J.W. Sanborn established an agricultural experiment field at the University of Missouri to study the impact of fertilizer and crop rotation in grain crop production. Later named for Sanborn, it was the first facility in the United States intended to measure erosion and run-off for varied agricultural practices and crops. The field was designated as a National Historic Landmark in 1964.

Arrangement:

The collection has been arranged by date.

Scope and Content Note:

The collection includes photographs of College of Agriculture faculty, several of which were taken at Sanborn Field, and a brief history of Sanborn Field.
