HISTORICAL SKETCH

The Missouri Press Association was organized at a meeting held in Temperance Hall in St. Louis on May 17, 1867. According to Floyd C. Shoemaker, the early history of the press association can be divided into distinct periods. The formative years, 1867-1884, were marked by the development of fraternity among the press men of the state. In 1885 meetings consisted primarily of business sessions concerned with the reduction and standardization of prices, the obtaining of news, and the writing of editorials. The years 1896 to 1906 were characterized by a period of public service. During this time the Missouri editors promoted the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in 1904 and the establishment of the School of Journalism at the University of Missouri. In addition, during its early years, the Missouri Press Association was instrumental in the founding of the State Historical Society of Missouri as well as the Confederate Soldiers' Home.

Later, district press associations were formed throughout the state. On November 20, 1891, the Northwest Missouri Press Association was founded in St. Joseph. Though first organized in Hannibal in 1889, meetings of the Northeast Missouri Press Association were revived in Kansas City in 1896. In November 1889, the Southwest Missouri Press Association (later the Ozark Press Association) came into existence, followed in 1924 by the organization of the Central Missouri Press Association in Jefferson City.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The strength of the collection lies in the set of Missouri Press Association bulletins containing advertising and confidential information for members of the association only, the proceedings of annual meetings, 1882-1919, and the minutes and programs of the annual meetings of the Northwest Missouri Press Association.
