ORGANIZATIONAL SKETCH

In 1984, under the auspices of the nonprofit organization U.S.-Japan Communications, the feasibility of a bilateral conference made up of prominent media women was investigated. Six months of strategic input established a small planning committee to review and update goals. Results of the study demonstrated overwhelming endorsement of the proposed project. Conference parameters and criteria for participation were also solidified by the planning committee

With women playing an increasingly prominent role in the communications industry throughout the world, the conference proved beneficial not only to women in media, but also academic and other institutions worldwide.
