HISTORICAL SKETCH

The George A. Fuller Company, based in New York City, specialized in building construction and construction management. Founded in 1882 by George A. Fuller, the company built a number of famous structures, including Pennsylvania Station in New York, the Savoy-Plaza Hotel in Chicago, and the Lincoln Memorial and the National Cathedral. The company was also responsible for the construction of several major buildings in the Kansas City area. The company was sold in 1970.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The collection consists of construction site photographs for buildings constructed by the George A. Fuller Company in Kansas City, Missouri, area. The photographs document the progress of construction, from the removal of previous structures through the completion of the new building.

Included in the collection are construction photographs of Union Station, located at Pershing Road and Main Street; the Railway Exchange Building, located on 7th Street between Grand and Walnut; Children's Mercy Hospital, located at Independence Avenue and Walnut Avenue; temporary barracks at Fort Riley, Kansas; the S. S. Kresge Building, located at 12th Street and Main; and the William Rockhill Nelson Memorial Chapel, located in Mount Washington Cemetery in Independence, Missouri.

Some photographs have been digitized. See a staff member for additional information.
