Joseph Pulitzer was an editor and newspaper publisher. The papers primarily relate to his editorship of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and cover nearly every aspect of the operation and production of the newspaper, including its internal business management, and its editorial policies. The collection contains extensive correspondence with family, journalists and politicians.

The originals of the documents contained in this collection are located in the Library of Congress.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The Papers of Joseph Pulitzer span the years 1897 to 1958, with the bulk of the material dated between 1925 and 1955.

A group of approximately 3,000 pieces of family correspondence contains letters exchanged over the years 1897 to 1955. Deserving of special mention in this series are Mr. Pulitzer's letters to his children: Joseph, Jr., Michael, Elinor, and Kate Davis. His sons followed him to St. Mark's school, and he maintained the closest interest in every aspect of their educational training. His letters not only inquired into their courses and grades, but also into their habits, extracurricular activities, and the character of their friends. Equal concern is shown in his letters to his Daughters--Elinor at Stuart School of Art in Boston and Kate Davis at Foxcroft School in Virginia. The correspondence continues throughout the adult lives of his children. This series also contains a large number of letters pertaining to the settlement of the estate of the senior Joseph Pulitzer, (1847-1911).

A general correspondence series contains letters between Pulitzer and many leaders in the fields of government and journalism. Although numerous letters are of a routine nature, there are certain groups of letters of particular interest, such as those of Pulitzer's close friend Bernard Baruch. These letters discuss such divergent topics as national and international affairs, business trends, and the two men's mutual interest in hunting and fishing. Correspondents in the field of publishing includes Arthur H. Sulzberger, Adolph S. Ochs, Agnes and Eugene Meyer, Joseph Medill Patterson, and Norman Chandler. This group of papers also contain letters from Summer Welles, Herbert Bayard Swope, and Stuart Symington, among others.

The most vital segment of the papers in the business file. It is in these manuscripts that Pulitzer reveals the drive and almost obsessive care which bestowed on all phases of his newspaper's production. Hundreds of memorandums written to various staff members of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch range from erudite discussions of editorial policy to such a mundane matter as Pulitzer's objection to the tone of voice used by a certain secretary. Even a cursory examination of topics included in the editorial files reveals the wealth of material available to readers on a wide range of domestic and foreign problems.

Although Pulitzer was physically absent from the Post-Dispatch offices for considerable periods of time on fishing and hunting trips, he maintained contact and close control of events at the newspaper through masses of telegrams and memorandums. These, the most important files for students of 20th-century American politics, contain communications between Pulitzer, his editorial writers, and Washington bureau reporters. Among these editors and correspondents are such illustrious names in American journalism as Oliver K. Bovard, Irving Dilliard, Benjamin Reese, Raymond L. Crowley, Charles G. Ross, Raymond P. Brandt, Paul Y. Anderson, and Marquis Childs. The Subject matter of these papers ranges over the entire spectrum of newspaper operations and includes contract negotiations with the American Newspaper Guild and other unions involved in the publication of the Post Dispatch; Pulitzer's policy of refusing to accept in the paper advertising which he considered to be fraudulent; his analyses of the cost factors in the management of the paper; and carefully charted comparisons of the operation of the Post-Dispatch and competitive newspapers.

Also in the business file are papers which amply illustrate Pulitzer's belief that a newspaper must not only report events but must act as a moral force in the community. In addition to detailing the constant pressure which the Post-Dispatch exerted for rectitude in the fields of local and national politics, the file also includes information on special issues which Pulitzer pursued, such as his intense opposition to President Franklin D. Roosevelt's "court-packing" plan, the symposium which he organized during World War II which he wrote during and inspection of Nazi concentration camps. These papers also reveal the particular pride which Pulitzer took in the purely visual aspect of his newspaper--his attention to the appropriateness of typefaces and his use of advanced rotogravure processes which made sections of the Post Dispatch equal to the best of leading national magazines.

A subject file contains papers concerning the Pulitzer Prize, which was instituted by his father. There are files relating to nominations, meetings of the advisory board, and the presentation of the award. The subject file also includes information relating to the management of Pulitzer's principal residence at Clayton, Mo. and his summer home at Bar Harbor, Maine. There are extensive files revealing his passion for hunting and fishing, replete with records of his catches, descriptions of the types of equipment used, etc. Here too are records of his charitable contributions to both individuals and institutions.

Finally, the collection contains a group of financial papers including records of Pulitzer's investments in stocks and bonds as well as papers relating to estates and trusts set up by both Pulitzer and his father.

Also in the Library of Congress are the papers (6,500 items) of elder Joseph Pulitzer, which were given to the Library in 1935.
