Irving Dilliard donated his papers to the Western Historical Manuscript Collection on September 30, 1987.

Dilliard began work at the St. Louis Post-Dispatch as a correspondent for his high school in Collinsville, Illinois. After he graduated from the University of Illinois in 1927, he joined the Post's staff. He attended graduate school at Harvard for a year and returned to the newspaper as an editorial writer. The Post published his collected columns on the Constitutional Convention of 1787 as a pamphlet in 1937 to commemorate the U.S. Constitution's 150 birthday. That pamphlet, entitled Building the Constitution, went through 19 printings. From 1938 to 1939 Dilliard returned to Harvard as one of the first nine Nieman Fellows.

Dilliard covered many topics as an editorial writer but came to specialize in writing about civil liberties and constitutional law. He became a noted authority on the Bill of Rights and the U.S. Supreme Court. In 1941 he wrote Mr. Justice Brandeis, Great American, and in 1952, he edited a collection of Judge Learned Hand's papers entitled The Spirit of Liberty.

In 1947 the Post-Dispatch gave Dilliard the important assignment of editing the supplement observing the 100th anniversary of Joseph Pulitzer's birth. Dilliard also wrote Missouri- A Guide To The Show Me State. While working as an editorial writer for the Post, he published widely in magazines and reference works, including the New Republic, the Nation, and the Dictionary of American Biography, Dictionary of American History, Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences, and the Encyclopædia Britannica.

During World War II, Dilliard served the Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force, eventually attaining the rank of lieutenant colonel. After the war, he worked in information services for the Allied military government in Bavaria and helped re-establish newspapers in occupied Germany. In 1949 he wrote The Development of Free Press in Germany: An Aspect of American Military Government. He received military decoration from the governments of France and Britain, as well as the United States.

Dilliard editorialized about many topics during his 33 years with the Post-Dispatch, but he often focussed upon the stories of people whose civil rights had been violated. One important case that he helped publicized was that of George Anastaplo, who was denied the right to practice law in Illinois for refusing to answer a question from the Bar Committee about the existence of God. The US Supreme Court upheld this decision, but Dilliard's editorials praised the dissenting opinion of Judge Hugo Black. Another case that Dilliard championed involved a German war bride named Ellen Knauff, who had been denied admission into the United States for vague and unsubstantiated reasons. When the Immigration Service sought to extradite Mrs. Knauff from Ellis Island, Dilliard made a successful appeal to the US Supreme Court to issue a restraining order. Mrs. Knauff was removed from a plane headed for Germany and returned to Ellis Island. Knauff was later granted US citizenship.

Dilliard maintained many professional associations during his career. He served as president and fellow of the professional journalism fraternity Sigma Delta Chi. He received honorary degrees from Colby College, the New School of Social Research, MacMurray College, Brandeis University and Southern Illinois University. The St. Louis B'nai B'rith gave Dilliard an award for service to human rights, and the New York Civil Liberties Union gave him its Florina Lasker award; and he was appointed as Elijah Lovejoy Fellow at Colby College. The American Bar Association cited him for contributions to public understanding of the judicial system. Dilliard was also a Chevalier in the French Legion of Honor and a senator of the Phi Beta Kappa fraternity. He retired from the Post-Dispatch in February, 1960.

See collection S0514 for an oral history interview conducted in 1990.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The Irving Dilliard papers, 1867-1961, document Dilliard's career at the St. Louis Post Dispatch. The oldest documents in the collection are St. Louis Daily Dispatch business receipts from 1867 for steamer departure advertising notices collected by Dilliard, but the collection primarily dates from the early 1930s to Dilliard's retirement in 1960. Some booklets from Dilliard's collection dates from the 1920s, and his magazine collection continues into the 1990s. The Dilliard papers contain personal papers, including files on fraternities and professional associations that Dilliard joined; editorials and other writings; research files containing public speeches on a variety of topics which Dilliard collected, and a large subject file of newsclippings, correspondence and literature that informed his editorials. The papers also include Dilliard's correspondence file, with letters from readers, Post-Dispatch staff and many other independent writers and researchers, including Supreme Court Justices and famous political and newspaper figures. Dilliard's collection of news and opinion magazines from 1930 to 1992 comprises one series; a collection of booklets and pamphlets dating back to 1924 constitute another. The collection includes one audio reel tape of Carl Sandburg's address at Shaare Emeth Temple Men's Club in St. Louis on January 19, 1958, and a small number of photographs.
